The WHEATON COLLEGE Department of Psychology invites applications for a tenure-track Assistant Professor position in Cultural Psychology, beginning in the fall of 2018. Wheaton College provides students an educational experience that affords opportunity to explore interests in the field in a supportive environment that cultivates curiosity, passion, and career aspirations. Offering courses and research opportunities in cultural psychology is in line with the college’s emphasis on social justice, multicultural competence, and informed global citizenry. The successful candidate will be able to teach Cross-Cultural Psychology, Introductory to Psychology, Quantitative Research Methods, and a 300-level cultural psychology seminar course. Additional courses may include: Multicultural Psychology, Laboratory in Qualitative Inquiry, and Psychology of Women. Our department and college provides a supportive context for the development of new colleagues. For example, we regularly offer faculty forums on teaching, learning, and diversity, and all tenure-track faculty are entitled to a fully paid pre-tenure sabbatical. Research funds to support scholarship will be made available.

Applications will be considered on an on-going basis beginning January 31, 2018. For full consideration, please send a letter of application, a curriculum vitae, two letters of reference, evidence of teaching effectiveness, and one copy of selected publications. Wheaton strives to be a community supportive of diverse perspectives and identities. Candidates should describe in their cover letter how their teaching and scholarship might support the college’s commitment to diversity and inclusion. Visit https://jobs.wheatoncollege.edu to apply. Please address any questions about the position or the selection process to Dr. Peony Fhagen, Chair and Associate Professor of Psychology and the African, African American, Diaspora Studies Program, fhagen_peony@wheatoncollege.edu.
